THE PRODUCE NEWS

SoCal, Arizona heat may boost production

Precipitation in Florida will continue off and on throughout the week and will clear out by Saturday morning with another cold front behind it. Temps will be below normal Saturday through Tuesday, Jan. 16.

Out west temps will be above normal for the South California and Arizona deserts starting this Friday and continuing through all of next week, which may lead to an increase of production. Mostly, wet veg is coming out these areas now.

A cold front is headed to the Bajío region of Mexico starting Friday of this week and continuing well into next week. Highs will remain normal in the upper 60s and low 70s, but nights will cool off into the 30s -- definite change of frost warning and possible freeze warning. Wet veg is also coming out of this area.

There are no major weather issues to report for Chile and Peru at this time.

For more info stay tuned and check out the Weathermelon app, which pulls data from USDA, as well as industry and weather experts and influencers.

The Weathermelon app offers consolidated lists of global growing regions for each commodity; a 10-day detail forecast for each region; current radar maps (U.S. only); estimated harvest start/end dates for each commodity; monthly average high/low temps for each region; and custom daily alerts for temperature, precipitation and severe weather based on 10-day forecasts.
