West Mexico growers navigate season of uncertainty

While contending with weather and the threat of tariffs, growers say the crop is shaping up well.

It's been a challenging season for growers in west Mexico, said Chris Ciruli, partner of PennRose Farms LLC.

"We had extreme heat early on in the season when we were planning, then [a] lack of water, followed by the uncertainty of the tariff situation, which has made for an interesting season, to say the least," Ciruli said.

Jorge Quintero Jr. agrees, noting it's nothing like he's seen during his time in the fresh produce industry. "We can't compare it to any other season as far as what I've seen, and I've been in the business for about 30 years now," said Quintero, operations manager for Grower Alliance LLC, which grows chili peppers.
